N.

N (1) n. Num, the ash tree, the eleventh letter of the modern Irish alphabet. It is most closely related to m and t, with which it assimilates: ōina = ōila, wool. In some districts, and in certain positions, p is substituted for n (cīoc for cnoc), as was also the case in Latin (cf. carmen for canmen, from cano; ōppāip for ōpḡnāip, nauseousness). It has two sounds, broad and slender. The broad sound has no equivalent in English and must be learned from a teacher, as nōp, a custom. The slender sound is like n in never, as neapc, strength. n, broad and slender, is silent after t, as cōna, the flesh; mūtneōip, a miller. In parts of the West and the North of Ireland n following c, m and sometimes p is pronounced like p. nḡ, though a simple sound, is somewhat difficult to acquire. In Oriel it is pronounced like ḡ, very guttural: aīgeat, from amḡeat. In the South mn is pronounced like the normal nḡ, but in the North like broad n. The pronunciation of slender n also differs in Ulster, being somewhat like n in not. (See O'Don. Gram. 33, 4, 5).

(2) n. The survival of a case ending belonging to certain words from which it is now separated and carried forward to the word which follows, causing eclipsis. It assumes the form of m before b, ς before c, b before p, and ϕ before f, but remains n before o, ς and vowels. It also appears after certain categories of words such as the numerals ρεα̇ς, ο̇ς, ναοι, ο̇ς; after the prepositions ςο (in certain cases), ιαρ, etc.; after αρ, our; βαρ, your, and α, their; after the interrogative particle αν; after the article (in sing. only) preceded by a preposition (except οο and οε, ςαν and οαρ); after a prep. ending with a vowel before the poss. pr. α. It sometimes becomes ρ after τε: he who desires. αν τε ιερμιαν (νό αν τε ιερ αβ μιαν), (O'D. Gram. 377).

Nacre, n., a pearly substance which lines the interior of many shells, more esp. mother of pearl, μάτταρ πέσρα.

S, p̃, Sail (the willow tree), the fifteenth letter of the Irish alphabet. It has two sounds—one broad like s in son, as połap̃, light; the other slender, like sh in shame, as pean, old, when it respectively precedes or follows a broad or slender vowel. It should, however, be remembered that p̃ in the assertive verb ip̃ is broad (except when followed by the pronouns é i, ia and ea), and also that p̃ when followed by b, m and p is broad, whether the vowel in connection with them be broad or slender. O'Donovan says that p̃p̃ comes under this rule, but if so it is not generally followed. Etymologically p̃ is most nearly related to τ, which eclipses it or takes its place if it commences a word preceded by the article and is followed by a vowel or l, n or p̃ in the nom. sing. fem. and the gen. sing. masc.

T.

T, τ (teine, furze; Genista spinosa), (1) the sixteenth letter of the Irish alphabet. It is etymologically most nearly related to o, with which it is sometimes interchangeable, as o'acair nó ta'acair, thy father. It has two sounds, (a) broad like t in the Italian and Spanish languages, as torann, noise, or something like th in the English word thorax; (b) slender like in the termination -tude, as tır, a country, tinnear, sickness. In Ulster it is sometimes pron. like t in nature, which is also the case in the Highlands, the Isle of Man and Meath. When aspirated (é) it is sounded in the beginning and middle of words like n, in the end of words it is hardly sounded, but sometimes it assumes the sound of c, as go brác (pron. go brác). In the middle of words, too, there is a tendency to almost slur it over. After the article τ- is prefixed in the singular number to mas. nouns beginning with a vowel in the nom. and acc. cases. The article also prefixes τ- to nouns beginning with ρ followed by a vowel, or the liquids λ, n, ρ in the nom. sing. fem. or gen. sing. mas.; (2) possessive pronoun before a vowel: τ'οροε, thy teacher; (3) suffixed personal pronoun: οὐιτ, to thee; αζατ, with thee.

That, pron., (1) a demonstrative pronoun, ῥιν, ῡῥ, ῥῡῥ: t. dog, ἄν ῥᾶῃαρ ῥιν νό ῡῥ; t. woman, ἄν ῥεαν ῥιν νό ῡῥ; those gentlemen, να ῥδοῖνε ῡᾶῖτε ῥιν νό ῡῥ. [Note.—In Or. ῡῥᾶῥῥ (ῡῥᾶῡῥ, Mayo) and ᾶῥᾶῥῥ are often used for ῡῥ.] As a demonstrative pron. it points out something understood or previously mentioned. It usually follows the noun to which it refers, and if such noun is qualified then it follows the adjective as that great country, ἄν τῖρ ῡῥῖρ ῥιν. There is one exception, viz., when the assertive verb ir is not expressed the demonstrative pron. precedes the noun : that is my game, rim mo éluice ; that is the old woman, rim an tpeanbhean ; that was all we had for our trouble, rim a maibh dá bárr aghainn ; that is how it is, rim mar adá ré. That is often used in opposition to this, and then this refers to that which is nearer or last mentioned, and that to what is more remote : I like this better than that, ir fearr liom ro ná rúo ; if the Lord will we shall live to do this or that, do éoil an Uígearna, aghur dá maibum beo, déanam ro nó rúo (Jas. 4, 15).

T. man, é rim.

T. woman, í rim.

However t. may be, pé rgeat é.

T. is, viz., t. is to say, eadón.

(2) As a relative it is equivalent to who or which, (a) té : he t. reproveth a scorner getteth to himself shame, an té aicé-bhoiriar tapcuirneac do sheib pé náire dó féin (Prov. 9, 7) ; did not he t. made t. which is without make t. which is within also ? a né nac é an té do rinne an taoib amuis do rinne an taoib iruis mar an sceadna (Luke 11, 40) ; (b) a : all t. he brought, a otus ré leir ; t. which he brought, ar eus pé leir ; all t. they used to say, zac focal dá n-abharóir.

(3) As a conjunction, (a) go : to the end t. he may prolong his days, ar éor go bparoeóca pé a laete (Deut. 17, 20) ; these things I say t. ye might be saved, deirim na neite ro do cum go rláineoócaoi ribri (John 5, 34) ; in the same way go preceded by ar gléar, i scáoi, ar moib, ionnur : t. it may please you, go mbad éoil leat ; t. I should not reign over them, go nac beinn mo rúg ór a scionn (1 Sam. 8, 7) ; (b) sur, in connection with past time : and God saw the light t. it was good, aghur do connairc Dia an solur, sur mar é (Gen. 1, 4).

Thatch, n., straw, rushes, etc., used for covering the roofs of houses, stacks of hay, corn, etc., (1) tuige, g. id., f. : don't take the t. off your own house to put slates on the ale-house, ná bain an tuige de do éis féin cum rleanna a cup ar éis an leanna (Prov.) ; tuige na háta ar an muileann ; (2) oíononn, -oinn, m., also oídean, -oine, f. and oíon, -in, m. : praise me for thatching and I shall praise you for the scollops, moí mipe cum an oíoinn i molfaoira cupa cum na rsoib.

Thatch, v.t., to cover with straw, reeds, etc., (1) cuirim tuige, with ar : I thatched the stack, cuiréar tuige ar an scruaid ; (2) oíonaim, v.n. oíon ; (3) cum-oúigim, -dac.

Thatcher, n., one who thatches, (1) tuigeadóir, -óir, -rí, m. ; (2) oíoinneadóir, -óir, -rí, m. ; (3) oíonadóir, m.

Thatching, n., the act of covering a house with straw, etc., (1) tuigeadóiréact, -a, f. ; (2) as cup tuige.

Thaw, v.i., to melt, dissolve or become fluid as ice, snow or anything frozen, leagam, -ad : do leig an rneacta.

Thawing, n., the act of melting or dissolving, (1) leagad, g. -gta, m. : the t. of the snow by the north wind .i. to add more to it, leasadh na saoi te a tuair ar an rneasta .i. tuilleadh a cuir leir (said of people who spoil things while trying to improve them); (2) as bogadh.

The, definite article, a word placed before nouns or before adjectives when they precede their nouns to limit their meaning, an, na: the world, an domhan, an eirinne; the boys and girls, na buachaillí na cailíní; one of them is dead and the other is alive, ta duine ada marb asur an duine eile beo; we have undone the man, do milleamar an duine. The article is not used before a noun which governs another in the genitive case, though both are limited in meaning, as: the Son of Man, mac an Duine. The same rule holds when the possessive is joined to the noun governed, as: the work of his hand, obair a láine. In Irish the article is also used idiomatically, (i) before a substantive followed by the demonstrative pronouns eo, rin, úo: this man, an fear eo; yonder woman, an bean úo; that country, an tír rin; (ii) also often before uite, all, every, as: an uite duine, every person.

(2) Before a noun preceded by its adjective, as: he is a good man, ir marb an fear é.

(3) Before the names of countries, places and rivers, as: an Spáinn, Spain; an Fhrainc, France; an tSionainn, the Shannon. Eire, Ireland, and Alba, Scotland, are exceptions, but they often have it in the genitive, as: uisge na hÉireann, uisge na hAlban (cf. O'Don. Gram. 345, 6).

Theatre, n., an edifice in which dramatic performances or spectacles are exhibited for amusement, amharclann, -ainne, -a, f. Thee, per. pron., tú (*cf. He has it as he wills it, (a) tá ré ar a toil péin aḡe; (b) tá ré ar a cōmaḡḡle péin aḡe.

(2) The auxiliary verb Will is expressed in Irish by certain terminations. In the first person sing., willingness, consent, or promise is denoted according to the subject of the verb, I will return to you again if God will; má'r toil le Dia é rḡḡḡrḡ mé cḡḡaibre árír (Acts. 18, 21); I will come to you shortly, tiocḡarḡ mé cḡḡaib ḡo haiḡḡearḡ (1 Cor. 4, 19). In the second and third persons will simply foretells a future event with little or no idea of volition as, you will go, imḡeócaḡ, he will go, imḡeócarḡ ré; should Donn-bo go with you I will go, oá nḡeaḡarḡ Donn-bó leat ruḡḡara leat (Y. B. L.; cf. 24 R. C. 44, where the spelling ruḡar is the same as is used in M. to this day).

Would, as the imperf. of Will, is chiefly employed in conditional, subjunctive and optative senses: he w. go if he could, ruḡarḡ ré oá bḡeaḡarḡ ré; he could go if he w., oá mb'áil leir o'ḡeaḡarḡ ré imḡeaḡḡ; he said he w. go, ouḡairḡ ré ḡo ruḡarḡ ré; whatsoever ye w. that men should do to you, ḡaḡ uile níḡ buḡ mian lib ḡaoinne oo ḡéanaḡ oib (Mat. 7, 12); I w. that I were young again, (a) oo b'áil uom ḡo mbeinn óḡ árír, (b) mó léan ḡan mé óḡ árír; w. God we had died when our brethren died, ḡruaḡ a Oé nár éaḡamar an tan o'éaḡarḡ ar nḡearḡráitḡe (Numb. 20, 3). Would is used conditionally for both present and future time, as: I w. go now if I were ready, ruḡamḡ leat anoir oá mbeinn ullamḡ; if it should rain he w. not go, oá nḡeanḡarḡ ré rḡarḡamḡ ní imḡeócarḡ ré.
